Price Of Bread Going Up Bakers Warn Housewives

CHICAGO, Sept. 10 (UP)—Housewives soon may have to pay more for a loaf of bread if wheat prices soar any higher on the nation's big grain exchanges, spokesmen for the baking and milling industries said today.

Officials of the National Federation of Millers said that the price of flour has been rising in pace with the price that millers pay for wheat.

Spokesmen for the baking industry in turn said it was "only a matter of time" before bakers would be forced to raise the price of bread. In states where it is permissible, they said, bakers might take the alternative of lessening the weight of the loaf.

Spokesmen for the nation's bakers said that the mounting price of eggs and butter, along with wheat, would make sweet goods such as cakes and cookies still more costly.

They said that the baking industry had tried to keep the price of bread as low as possible, but they added that "the bakers just can't go on indefinitely with the price of all their ingredients going up."

A PRODIGY PRACTICES—Although Francesco Burco, 8, has already won fame as a boy prodigy, he still practices his piano regularly in his home, Italy, home. His parents are eager to keep him from becoming impressed by his own ability, and want him to be like any other boy of his age.

Churchill Says Labor Government Must Be Ousted To Save Eng.

LONDON, Sept. 10 (UP)—Winston Churchill warned today that if the British wait too long to throw out the Labor Government it may be too late to save the country.

Churchill wrote a letter of endorsement to J. R. Bevin, the Conservative candidate in a Parliamentary by-election at Liverpool tomorrow which will indicate the present temper of British voters. The district went Labor in 1945.

"The longer the dismissal of the Socialist Government from office is put off the worse things will get and the harder it will be to repair the damage they have done," the wartime Prime Minister said.

"We thus are falling far behind other countries in regaining our prosperity and now at this time we have to face a winter of privations more severe than any endured during the war."

"We must never despair of the life and greatness of Britain, but I am convinced that the first step to ensure our survival must be the expulsion from power of those who mismanaged, mauled and maltreated their native land, and return of a House of Commons which truly represents the wisdom and voice of the nation."

He charged that Laborite "party factions and incapacity" were handicapping British recovery, as were Labor's "attempts to enforce their strange un-British doctrine by means of wartime regulations."

Five candidates seek the seat in the Edge Hill district of London to fill a vacancy caused by death.

Never Too Old To Learn

WILMINGTON, N. C., Sept. 10 (UP)—Eustace Norfleet, a 75 year old businessman, is going back to school for the first time since he quit Wake Forest College as a sophomore in 1890.

Norfleet was busy packing his luggage today after a telephone conversation with Dean Earnhart who said that he can return to his old alma mater. The dean was Norfleet's college classmate.

Norfleet's wife is accompanying the student-to-be to Wake Forest.

"We'll live just like these young married veterans," Norfleet said. Norfleet plans to study psychology and Bible. He quit school when he was 19 to care for his ailing parents. He worked in the fields, in a lumber mill and then in a printing shop, finally working his way to the top as owner.

But through all those 57 years Norfleet said he longed to go back to school.

"Now the school bells will ring again," Norfleet smiled.

LATE BULLETINS

Miss America Coldly Looks At Hollywood

HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 10 (UP)—Barbara Jo Walker, 21, Memphis, Tenn., "Miss America" of 1947, today said she would "listen politely" if she gets any movie offers but that nothing will change her intention to go back to Memphis State College and graduate.

The beauty queen and Elaine Campbell, 22, "Miss Minnesota," who placed second in the national contest at Atlantic City, N. J., arrived here last night to participate in a fashion show Friday at Catalina.

Miss Walker said she intends to be back at school in a month. "I'm not going to let this publicity interfere with my education," she said. "Nobody had offered me a thing to date but if they do I shall listen politely. Then I'll go back to school for my degree in modern languages."

War Unlikely In Near Future Lie States

BOSTON, Sept. 10 (UP)—Trygve Lie, secretary-general of the United Nations, said today he is convinced there will not be another war "within the foreseeable future."

In a speech prepared for the 20th annual convention of the National Association of Life Underwriters, he acknowledged that "frictions and differences" now divide some nations.

But he added, "I cannot make myself believe this situation will be allowed to lead to another war within the foreseeable future. We, in the United Nations, are proceeding on the rock-bound thesis that there must never be another war."

U. S. Secret Service Too Critical of Art

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Sept. 10 (UP)—The U. S. Secret Service's most famous painter of Benjamin Franklin and Ulysses Grant portraits, was under arrest again today for "failure to shade Benjamin Franklin's forehead."

But Walter L. Allred, 52, pleaded with U. S. Commissioner Louise O. Charlton that he was not guilty of counterfeiting a $100 bill by hand-painting it.

"I would be ashamed of shoddy work like that," he told Miss Charlton.

On his last conviction, in 1937, he was given 15 years but released conditionally in December, 1945, with six years to go.

Since 1945, he said he had been painting portraits all over North Alabama for $10 each, including the frame. He said he averaged about four a day, doing them in combination water colors and pastels.

Allred, a balding, nervous little man, said he quit school in the eighth grade upon the advice of his father to take up painting. He said he took a correspondence course in all phases of painting for three years and had made his living at it since he was 19.

A Chicago art dealer, he said, offered to buy two subjects and two landscapes he sold to Frank Holcher of Cullman, Ala., several years ago.

"Huckleberry Finn" Goes Free

SANTA MONICA, Calif., Sept. 10 (UP)—Jackie Moran, the screen's "Huckleberry Finn," was free on a two-year suspended sentence today for issuing $4,000 in worthless checks.

The 25-year-old former child star pleaded guilty to bad check charges in Superior Court.

Moran told the court an eastern personal-appearance tour beginning September 21 would help him pay off the $4,000.

Corn Crop Badly Hit By Drought

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10 (UP)—The Agriculture Department today estimated the critical and drought-hit 1947 corn crop at 2,403,000,000 bushels. This was a drop of about 34,000,000 bushels from the August 15 estimate.

Busman's Holiday: Shark Killer Goes

CAMPELLE, N. C., Sept. 10 (UP)—A marine life guard whose job is shooting off sharks from swimmers in the surf was recovering today from a swimming accident. He was bitten by a shark.

Pfc. Robert Sannino of Ocean City, N. J., went for a dip in his off-duty hours at Onslow Beach, a marine recreation area. A shark ripped his right leg.

Doctors at the base hospital said he suffered serious cuts but that his condition was good.

Europe Needs Aid Now Warns Sec. Marshall

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10 (UP)—Secretary of State George C. Marshall said today that Europe urgently needs stop-gap aid before the end of this year—and plainly hinted congress will have to be called into special session this fall to provide such relief.

Marshall did not openly commit himself on the question of a special session. But he left no doubt that he considers one necessary, saying:

1. An interim aid program would require congressional action.

2. The aid will be needed before the end of the year.

Since congress normally is not due to reconvene until January 2, it was plain from Marshall's press conference statement that he feels a special session is necessary.

Marshall promised that sufficient data will be available by the latter part of October to present to congressional committees on the needs of the stop-gap aid program.

He said the interim program is necessary before the "Marshall Plan" for European recovery takes effect.

"It must be given 'our urgent consideration,' he said, 'to meet the immediate threat of intolerable hunger and cold.'"

Republican congressional leaders have tossed in President Truman's lap the decision whether to call a special session and have said they did not think a special session is necessary.

Author Seeks Probe Of Klu Klux Klan

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10 (UP)—A man dressed in a flowing white robe of the Ku Klux Klan, and accompanied by a photographer, walked into the office of the House Un-American Activities Committee today to demand an investigation of the KKK.

A committee aide, who called it a publicity stunt, called Capitol police who escorted the man from the office before he talked to any official. The man identified himself as Stetson Kennedy, 30, author of the book "Southern Exposure."

Kennedy said the book exposed Klan activities. He said he wanted to disclose to the Congressional committee "evidences" of un-American activities in the Klan.

When Kennedy entered the committee office, he told receptionists that he wanted to talk to Chief investigator Robert E. Stripling. Stripling later told reporters that he received a letter from Kennedy some time ago requesting an interview and replied that he would be glad to talk to Kennedy whenever he was in Washington.

Kennedy was released after questioning by police and after he had removed the hooded robe.

Strict Tests Face College Students

BUFFALO, N. Y. (UP)—A detailed system of examinations, interviews and aptitude tests has been adopted by Canisius College, faced with the task of selecting 600 freshmen from a list of 1,800 applicants.

Facing from 10 to 12 hours of grueling tests, the prospective students must first prove to college officials his sincere determination to gain an education. Aptitude and capability examinations follow, supplemented by interviews conducted by a staff of 18 counselors.

In operation since July, 1946, the Canisius testing center is designed not only to weed out "misfits" but to direct young men into fields best suited to their ability. Finger and hand dexterity tests are regarded as important to would-be surgeons as psychological interviews are to art majors.

Dispute Referred To Authorities

RACINE, Wis. (U. P.)—Racine police were asked to settle an argument related to the old ditty about the price of a shave and a haircut. A barber told officials a customer entered his shop and asked for a shave. The barber refused, saying he shaved only regular customers. He told the man, however, he would shave him if he also had a haircut.

So the man sat down, had his hair cut, and was shaved. But he refused to pay the price of the haircut, arguing he wanted only the shave. Then the barber called police.

Authorities sighed and told the barber he'd have to see his attorney and collect the money for the haircut through him.

Dark Horse Entry In Southeastern Conference May Be Mississippi State College, Moss Says

By W. EDWIN MOSS, JR.
United Press Sports Writer

STARKVILLE, Miss., Sept. 10 (U. P.)—Mississippi State College, loaded with backfield talent, today appeared to be the dark horse entry in the Southeastern Conference football title race, despite the loss of all but one regular lineman from last year's team.

State's backfield, stars two deep at every position, will pack plenty of running, passing and kicking ability, with Tom (Shorty) McWilliams heading the list.

McWilliams, a 170-pound triple-threat, will be assisted by Wallace (Eagle) Matulich, the team's leading scorer last season, at the tailback position in the Allyn McKeen-coached Tennessee system.

Others include two hard-running wingbacks, Harper Davis, an All-Conference player, and Graham Bramlett; James Bailey and James Pittman, two powerful and speedy fullbacks; and blocking backs Truitt Smith and James Stuart.

McKeen, who has brought home 54 victories against two ties and 12 defeats in seven years as head coach at Mississippi State, praised Smith as the "Best blocking back I have coached" since coming here.

His big problem this year will be to put together a forward wall. Only Captain W. D. (Dub) Garrett, one of the section's finest tacklers, is returning.

However, State may still offer a hard-hitting line that will be sufficient to hold off the opponents while the jet-propelled backfield piles up points.

Along with Garrett will be four lettermen from last year's team that lost only to Alabama and Louisiana State Universities.

The probable starting line will be Murray Alexander, a 206-pound sophomore, and Kenneth Davis, a fleet-footed, pass-catching second-year man, at the flanks; Garrett and George Carterright, a 200-pound non-letterman, at the tackle posts; Jesse Hughes and Martin Johnson, a pair of 200-pounders, at the two guard positions.

Pete Ray, who tips the scales at 196 pounds, is expected to move into the starting pivot slot.

McKeen earlier this week began sending his squad of 44 prospects, 17 of them lettermen, through two workouts daily. He planned to continue like twice-daily drills until the season opens against Chattanooga, Sept. 26.

He would not admit that his team might be in the middle of the Conference title scramble, but he did agree that his backfield combination probably would rank among the best in the loop. He added, however, that his line was untested and probably would not stack up with the opposing teams. "It's like a man with a full dress coat and cotton pants—plenty of high class bucks and an inexperienced line with little reserve strength," the veteran mentor said.

Today's Sports Parade

By Oscar Freley
United Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK, Sept. 10 (U. P.)—Lord Byron Nelson, the dead-panned Texan who ruled the war-time fairways, was back in competitive golf today as a member of the Ryder Cup Team with indications that 1948 would find him abandoning that old rocking chair.

Nelson, who clubbed out some weeks ago, that the Ryder Cup matches would be resumed with England, PGA President Ed Dudley received a wire from Nelson which pleaded:

"Count me in."

The P. G. A. was not only agreeable. It was delighted.

A lot of the boys had been complaining rather vociferously that Nelson did them a disservice by ducking out of competition as soon as the fields had become strengthened again. They challenged his right to reigning as one of golf's all-time greats off his war-time nomination. So that's one point which may be settled.

And naturally, the pro golfing fathers were delighted to have even a rusty Nelson for the international matches. Just how creaky the one-time Fort Worth caddy has become may be seen from a 66 he carded this week at Cypress Point while "just fooling around."

Anywhere near his normal game, Nelson will be a great asset to the American Ryder Cup forces for he doubtless is one of the best match players in golf history. He proved that his first year on the Big Apple, back in 1935.

The pros were burning to a slow crisp that winter because they had to qualify for the San Francisco match play tournament and the sponsors gave Lawson Little, then newly-crowned British and U. S. amateur champ, a free pass into match play. The first man Little met was the unknown Nelson.

and that was the end of Little. National open champion in 1939, Nelson also has compiled an amazing record in the match play P. G. A. championships. In the last seven tournaments he has won two, reached the finals three other times, the semi-finals once and the quarter-finals once.

Lord Byron lost to Henry Picard in the '39 finals; beat Sam Snead in '40; lost to Vic Ghezzi in the '41 finals; lost to Jim Turnesa in the '42 semi-finals; met Bob Hamilton in the '44 finals; beat Sam Byrd in the '45 finals, and in '46 lost to Ed (Porkchops) Oliver in the quarter-finals.

Now he's coming back and, if as expected he makes it permanent, a lot of guys are going to eat their words about him being a war-time "Cheese-Champion."

The first American patent is more than 300 years old. On March 6, 1646, a colonial iron worker, Joseph Jenkes, petitioned the general court of Massachusetts to recognize the originality of his water-powered sawmill and grant him a patent. It did.

NSLI REINSTATEMENT DEADLINE EXTENDED TO JANUARY 1, 1948

World War II veterans who have let their wartime National Service Life Insurance term policies lapse for a period of more than three months, and who failed to reinstate their policies before August 1, now have until January 1, 1948, to take advantage of the liberal reinstatement privileges.

Until this announcement was made, World War II veterans had only until midnight August 1 to reinstate their policies without generally having to take a physical examination.

The deadline was extended to give every former policyholder more time to reinstate his Government insurance simply by executing the required application and certifying that he is in as good health as he was at the time of lapse. Only two monthly premiums must accompany an application for reinstatement of term insurance.

The deadline was extended last February to August 1, 1947. During the past five months, more than 500,000 veterans reinstated policies carrying upwards of three and a half billion dollars of insurance protection.

Baptist WMS Holds Supper At Mrs. Jack Kennedy Home

The Y.W.A. of the First Baptist Church was honored by the Fannie McElrath Circle of the WMS with a supper at the home of Mrs. Jack Kennedy, South Sixth street, Tuesday evening at 5:30.

Following the devotional which was conducted by Miss Joan Hendon, a solo entitled "In The Garden" was rendered by Miss Sarah Cavanaugh.

A very unique program about Indians was presented with members of the Circle gathered around a miniature camp fire.

Members of the Y.W.A. present were Misses Joan Hendon, Mary Jane Kennedy, Bonnie Kingins, Letta Gibson, Anne Lee, Cress, Sarah Cavanaugh, Evelyn Heister and George Ann Upchurch.

Members of the Circle present were Mrs. B. B. Sawyer, Mrs. Jack Kennedy, Mrs. A. F. Yancey, Mrs. Pat Hookett, Mrs. Eugene Shipley, Mrs. Hiram Rogers, Mrs. Hugh McElrath, Mrs. Ronald Churchill and Mrs. Noble Farris.

ELISABETH SANXAY HOLDING

Maggie MacGowan, unable to find an office job, becomes a maid in the home of Mrs. Mayfield and her brother Mr. Camford. But she dislikes this menial position and is determined to leave as soon as she can. She is intrigued by her employers' niece, the elegant and mysterious Miss Dolly, who has led a strangely solitary life since coming to live with them, but who evidently once moved in gay circles. One day, Miss Dolly tells Maggie she's going to the country to escape from an unwelcome suitor who has threatened her, and she asks Maggie to go with her as her "secretary." Late that night, they meet a man whom Miss Dolly calls "Neely." He drives them to an isolated house in the country.

"I'm—I came with Miss Camford," said Maggie. "Squame," he said. "The dainty little French maid." "I'm not French," said Maggie. The man ran his fingers through his dark hair. "You're pretty," he said earnestly. "You're the cutest little trick I ever saw. Red hair, too. Are you saucy?" With all her heart she resented his words. His tone, the way he was staring at her. She went on with her work, trying to ignore him. "I bet you slap people," he said. "Fresh cuts!" There was a loaf of bread on a shelf. It was stale, hard as a rock. She sawed away at it with a knife. "YOU'RE pretty," he said, "but not very polite. After all, when a pretty girl suddenly appears in my kitchen in the middle of the night, I think she ought to speak." "Is it your kitchen?" said Maggie. "Half of it's mine."

"Where do you want supper served, please?" asked Maggie. "What supper?" he said. "The only thing you ought to wear silk stockings instead of cotton." She looked at him with scorn in her blue eyes. "Aha!" he said. "I knew you were saucy."

"I'm not saucy," she said. "I'm here doing the work I'm paid to do. If you feel like standing there and making fun of me, I can't stop you. I wasn't making fun of you," he said. "That's just a cheap idiot's way of having fun. I was admiring you. It's the same old Johnny Cassidy."

The man stood staring at her. "For Pete's sake, who are you?" he asked.

a little snack—coffee—anything. Here's the kitchen."

Maggie saw now that his hair was not white, but a pale blond, strong-boned face, and pale eyes.

She went into the room he pointed at a dim and dirty kitchen lit by a feeble bulb hanging from the ceiling with a bare wooden floor, an oil-stove furry with grease, a narrow iron sink she set down her bag looked around her, and narrowed her eyes to keep from crying.

All right! I was a fool to come! I might have known she opened her little bag and put on her apron. She found a paper bag of coffee, a battered old aluminum coffee pot, and some ants running around. I would not work for the woman who runs this house, thought Maggie, not for fifty dollars a week. I never saw—

"For Pete's sake," said a voice, and she turned quickly. A man in a dressing-gown stood in the doorway, a big, sun-burned, gray-eyed man, staring at her.

"For Pete's sake, who are you?" "This is my secretary, Miss Mac-Gowan," said Miss Dolly, with more than a trace of coyness. "Do come along now, Maggie. What put it into your head to start all this at such an hour?"

"The—other gentleman asked me to."

"Neely? Oh, he hasn't any sense of time at all. This way, Maggie." Maggie picked up her bag from the corner and Johnny Cassidy took it from her.

"No, thank you," she said. "I'd rather go."

But he went ahead of her out of the kitchen and up a steep and narrow stair. He put the bag in a room and came out.

"Good night, Miss MacGowan," he said.

MISS DOLLY closed the door and they both looked around them at the room. It was furnished with his duffan, a wicker chair, a bamboo table, some shelves of books. Here, too, the only light was from a bulb hung from the rafters; it was gloomy, shadowy, smelling of mold.

"We can fix it up tomorrow," said Miss Dolly. She crossed the room to the duffan and pressed it with her hand. "It seems very comfortable. My room is just in here, through the door, and the bathroom is just across the hall. It's going to be nice here, don't you think?"

"Well, it's hard to judge yet, Miss Dolly."

"Please tell me Dolly! We're going to have a wonderful summer here, Maggie. We'll change things and make the place charming."

"Excuse me, Miss Dolly, but isn't there any lady of the house?"

"No. It's Neely's house. He's an artist. I didn't know Johnny Cassidy would be here. But I don't think he'll stay long."

"There's just Mr. Cassidy and Mr. Neely."

"Christus Cornelius Curtis. He's a Dutchman. You'll like him."

"Yes, miss," said Maggie. "But you will call me Dolly, won't you? You've come here as my friend, Maggie."

"I'll try," said Maggie. "Let's go to bed," said Miss Dolly. She took the dress, her shoes, and Miss Dolly were alone in the house with those two men.

She returned to the big room and she wanted to look the door. There was no key in the lock, no bolt. She fixed a chair under the knob, and took the faded green cover off the duffan. Nothing under it but a mattress, no sheets, no blankets.

She did try a little then, but while the tears ran down her cheeks she was busy. She put the green cover back, she fluffed up the pillows, she took off the dress, her shoes, she put on her dark-blue dressing-gown and her felt slippers, and then she went to the duffan to get a book. For she had decided to sit up all night.

Soviet Delegate Andrei Gromyko indicates his 11th use of the veto as he turns down the American plan for a United Nations border commission in Greece aimed at curbing repeated Balkan "threats to peace and security." His action, a common occurrence at meetings here, signifies Russia's great power of veto, which killed the plan.
